What to expect ... at your first Support Group

It is a big step to attend your first support group, but it doesn't need to be UNCOMFORTABLE. Here's what you can expect:

- MHALC's groups are peer-facilitated, which means the group leader has been in your shoes. He or she will truly understand what you're going through, and can provide insight and advice based on firsthand experience.
- All groups are free and held on a drop-in basis. You don't have to sign up in advance, and if you attend one time and it doesn't feel like the right fit, you don't have to come back. However, we do recommend that you give the group a few chances, as the dynamic can change every meeting and you might find your place after a few tries.
- All groups are confidential – this helps us build an environment where individuals can be honest and open. Groups can be an alternative to, or addition to, a traditional counseling service. Find what works for your own support needs and recovery.
- You do not have to share your story at any meeting; you can choose to come and just listen to others share, as you may feel more comfortable hearing how others have dealt with situations that are familiar. Remember, you can offer to share, only if you're ready to do so and could use a listening ear.

Peer-facilitated support groups are a great place to start your recovery journey. We hope you'll find that by hearing others' stories, you'll feel less alone in your experiences. Reach out today – we're here to support you.

If you have any questions regarding support groups, feel free to call MHALC at (717) 397-7461.

Student observers of support groups are asked to call the MHALC office to register for observations. Not all support groups are open to observers. You must be registered to attend as an observer; without a registration, you will be asked to leave the support group and return after speaking with the MHA Support Group Coordinator. Thank you for your understanding.
